The Allied leaders decided to limit their assistance to the Caucasian republics to the supply of arms, munitions, and food. For most of the court's history, the five permanent members of the France, USSR, China, the United Kingdom, and the United States have always had a judge serving, thereby occupying three of the Western seats, one of the Asian seats and one of the Eastern European seats. Once a case has been filed, any party usually the applicant may seek an order from the court to protect the status quo pending the hearing of the case.
