Product Details

Patton on the Defensive On September 25 12th Army Group commander had ordered Patton to go on the defensive so that precious fuel reserves could be channeled to Allied forces engaged in Operation Market Garden, a major operation designed to capture key bridges in Holland. The Red Ball Express itself consumed 300,000 gallons of precious gasoline every day--nearly as much as a field army. Eddy temporarily halted the advance of his frozen, exhausted infantry divisions on November 12 to protect his left flank and also to adjust for a narrowing of the front resulting from topography.
