According to sociologists, we construct reality through our interactions with others. He showed his commitment to social reform and leftist causes by becoming the first president in 1935 of the Harlem Artists Guild, an offshoot of the left-wing Artists' Union whose members mobilized to deal with the concerns of black cultural workers whose needs they felt were not being addressed by the larger downtown-based organization Timmerman, 21. The Social Construction of What? As in a play, the setting matters as well.

Social Constructionism

Human beings construct a social reality through common intentions that assign functions to physical objects, as when a certain type of paper comes to be treated as money.

The Social Construction of American Realism, Kaplan

In his mural of 1930 for the Sherman Hotel, the urban North, symbolized in a cabaret scene, is not free from the specter of white physical violence, symbolized by a hand coming up from the bottom of the mural, connecting it with terror typical of the South.
