Although, as the twentieth century unfolded, farm women gave up many of their traditional productive functions in the henhouse, garden, and farm kitchen, in the post—World War II era they adopted a new productive role in the farm field, one that relied on their use of modern field technology. Also see Joseph Dorfman, The Economic Mind in American Civilization New York: Viking, 1949 , vol. As a result, in the Selective Service Act of May 18, 1917, Congress provided that dry zones must be established around every army base, and it was made illegal to sell or even to give liquor to any member of the military establishment within those zones, even in one's private home.
