Aristotle's Categories (Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy)

Likewise, it may be a historical accident that there are active and passive verbs in our language. The same is true of line, surface, place, and arguably speech.

Aristotle's Two Systems

And we can answer: a human is an animal.

Aristotle

Substance, Form and Psyche: an Aristotelian Metaphysics, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press. Speech hardly seems like a natural candidate for this category.

Aristotle's Categories (Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy)

For, he thinks that a species in substance is said-of primary substances while species in the other categories are not said-of primary substances. Any sensible particular, substance, event, sound, etc.
