Pottery If Song is exemplified by painting, its is best illustrated by exquisite , for which both the Northern and Southern Song dynasties are renowned. The present vase clearly illustrates the dependence of the Southern Song production on its Northern prototypes. Besides a finely engraved inscription of a poem by the Qianlong Emperor, it shows two larger characters reading feng hua, which have been more coarsely scratched through the glaze and bear traces of cinnabar.

Kuan Ware, Sung Dynasty

The current beautiful Guan ware washer has a particularly successful glaze and well defined crackle. Bands appear occasionally on other Song wares, notably Yingqing, and were sometimes used to conceal damage rather than an unglazed rim. The color is clear and transparent, and greatly treasured by the present generation.
