SW: It seems that in the current milieu of poetry, older writers get less attention — aside from Mary Oliver, though Donald Hall who died at 89, published A carnival of Losses: Notes Nearing Ninety and Molly Keane, whose pseudonym was M. He currently serves as general editor of the Cambridge World Shakespeare project.

Negative capability

All great story-telling and poetry is essentially the art of entertaining different hypotheses or outcomes, and exploring the potential value or interest of various outcomes. To keep viewers in a purely subjective and sensual realm, regardless of how abstract the case might be, to simply seek to generate impressions which keep the viewer confined to the literal and to fail in the challenge of giving the inexpressible some intelligible form which leads to some definite thought-object became the hallmark of the Modernists and Post-Modernists. Keats relishes the seeming suspension of reality captured by the static nature of the urn and explores all of its poetic possibilities.
