Education of Jewish Girls in the United States

The Center Academy was established in 1927 as a coeducational elementary school at the Brooklyn Jewish Center, then a modern Orthodox congregation that served an upper-middle-class community and gravitated toward Conservative Judaism. Often Yiddish-language oriented and including bundists, socialists, anarchists, Yiddish culturalists, Zionists, and nationalists, education became critical to each group as it sought to establish itself in America and propagate its ideas and faith among a new generation of Jewish youth. Spencer then spent years looking through records of Wayne State University medical students, thinking one of them must have been her biological parent.
