Match From The Past

The speed limit on city streets, unless posted otherwise, is 25 mph, and at the end of this week, the equivalent speed limit in New York City will fall from 30 to 25 as well. I did this project on a blustery winter day in January. They used to be kept out on bush roads, but a government some years ago had the bright idea of bringing them right into the city, albeit on restricted roads.

Couldn't get your devilish number, though. I regret the increasing tendency for roads to sprout lower and lower speed limit signs: these reinforce the notion that the speed limit is a target speed rather than a maximum. If you feel the side wind changing the direction of your vehicle, gently steer in the opposite direction to bring yourself back.

Book Review

I think there may still be flower fields there - but many fewer than in the 30's. Windy conditions also make it more difficult for deer to spot a hunter in a tree or on the ground. I wonder how many bus passengers find that the keys tempt them to pull the driver out of the cab and back the truck up for him.

Book Review

That increased to about 35 meters under moderate winds, and skyrocketed to an average of 65 meters once winds exceeded 16 miles per hour. Isn't there a chance that the descending car is unable to climb the hill as well after it has had to stop and reverse? But why worry about local orchards where there are no local orchards? I remember the names Jennings and Darbshire, but I cannot remember a thing about them.

Brum and the Very Windy Day

Sorry, mine is on I-15, just before Barstow. If there is no hard shoulder and the oncoming vehicle is a road train, you are probably dead.
