Kirkstall Abbey and precinct including a prehistoric cup and ring marked rock, Kirkstall, Leeds

The carving on the east end of the rock consists of five cups, all with single rings, one with a possible second ring and some with grooves from the cup. And yet I believe Mr W. SWhitaker's History of Craven, p.

Archaeologists have found a plunge pool which could have been part of a healthy living fad in the late 19th century

The pond was fed by a small stream known as Hell Hole Gill which ran north to south through the precinct. It bears the name of John de Bardsey, who was Abbot in 1396, and thus we have a pretty good notion of its date.

Grounds for improvement: Kirkstall Forge redevelopment

A small laver against the west wall of the refectory was fed by a pipe which led from the new lavatorium in the south wall of the cloister. Extending across the chancel is the usual elevated footpace for the high altar, which is stated to have been of white freestone, and to have been destroyed in the early part of last century. It is much to be regretted that this part of the Monastery has been so much destroyed ; a considerable portion of the west wall was, however, standing at the close of the last century, as appears by a plan then published.

They were established in all parts of England, some in towns and others in the remotest of areas. Many monasteries contained large and valuable libraries, our early chronicles were compiled in the cloister, and the well-known work of Richard, of Cirencester, on Roman Britain, had its origin there. A beautiful view of the Abbey is obtained by approaching it through this gateway.
