National Programme of the Development of Audio

Audiovisual records may also include materials acquired from non-Federal sources that document or are used to carry out agency programs. Most audiovisual media are designed and manufactured not for permanence but for performance and economy. Provenance, in this context, means information on the origin, ownership, and custody history of records. Copies of original film materials and analog audio and video tapes are inferior when compared to originals, especially if the copies have received a great deal of use.

Shen Milsom & Wilke

Captioning or other descriptive information does not have to be affixed to the record itself but may be maintained in a parallel file, catalog, or database if the correlation is clear.
