The student makes a disrespectful comment in return. The above list is not exhaustive. A note of caution: The non-verbal defusing strategies discussed here are not appropriate if the teacher feels that he or she may be in imminent danger of attack or assault.

The power trap

The former leaders of Enron are prime examples, as are countless dictators and other politicians.

We took all of these features, identified if a user was an active user of those features in Slack, and then ranked users based on the number of core features they used. For example, Reforge GP Fareed Mosavat found the L28 definition to be too broad for Slack, where many users had near-daily engagement but were not actually outliers.

Students may not feel comfortable telling the teacher that they don't like a class assignment, have forgotten their study materials for the fourth time this week, or do not know how to do the math problem that they have been asked to solve on the board. Above all, the teacher does not want the student to feel 'rewarded' with humor for confronting the adult, as this response may actually make the student more likely to react aggressively toward the teacher in the future. One strategy to remove the student is to send him or her to the office on an errand, with the expectation that-by the time the child returns to the classroom-he or she will have calmed down.
