US election 2020: The psychology of voting ... and not voting

Those 65 years old and older will make up a larger share of EVs—going from 21 percent in 2016 to 22 percent in 2020 and to 27 percent in 2036—while those ages 18 through 64 will shrink. County-level turnout rates The process of creating county-level 2012 and 2016 turnout rates for each of our 32 demographic groups began by generating state-level estimates for these groups.

The goal of this process was to produce reasonable estimates about the composition of EVs within a given county. The United States Census Bureau. When this assumption is made—while leaving other aspects of 2016 voting constant—Democrats win both the popular and Electoral College votes in 2020 as well as subsequent elections.

Social Issues and Voting Behavior

Nationally, Democrats would increase their popular vote margin by about 2 points compared with their margin in 2012—going from a 3. This is because, while the simulation assigns Maine to the Democrats, it is likely that the GOP might still carry the 2nd Congressional District in the state, based on 2016 voting patterns, which would give them one additional electoral vote—enough to tip the election to the Republicans with a win of 270-268. It is provable, unarguable and unequivocal.

Fear, Psychology, and American Voting Behavior

So, in addition to poll taxes, the Voting Rights Act banned literacy tests and forms of voter suppression like grandfather clauses which were laws that said you could only vote if your grandfather had voted. This analysis assumes that large portions of the electorate are ideologically consistent and motivated. And Republicans, despite losing the popular vote, would still pull out a narrow electoral vote victory of 273-265 in 2020.
