Blood program in World War II

On June 11, 1944, they were married. Red Cross collection centers in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Oakland initially provided blood for the Pacific airlift; as the need for blood increased, the Red Cross added centers in Portland, OR and San Diego to the supply chain. A major reason, of course, is the impact this therapeutic advance has had upon medical care, civilian as well as military.

History Of Blood Transfusions 1628 To Now

Toward the end of 1943, scientists had proven that the German drug atabrine could cure falciparum malaria.

WWII Medical Innovations

After World War II, the United States continued its blood programs as a medical service available to hospitals across the nation. From his cot in the corner, he wrote about what he saw and what he heard. The two were among others on their way to the island of Tulagi.

WWII Medical Innovations

The sailor knew he would never forget the chaplain, but he was also sure he would never see him again.

History Of Blood Transfusions 1628 To Now

Chicago went on line for the Pacific in January 1945, and after the end of hostilities in Europe, whole blood for the Pacific began to flow from New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Washington and Brooklyn. He was helped into sick bay and immediately given a unit of blood plasma ... but little hope of survival.

World War II Blood Program

He went alone, because no corpsman could be spared to accompany him.
