Western Grebes run side-by-side across the surface of the water, wings back, in matching anime ninja postures.

American Frontier: 48 Historic Photos Of Life In The Real

A species account is basically the scientific lowdown on a bird — what it looks like, where it lives, what it eats, its sexual proclivities — all that good stuff. In my travels I did, though, run across an excellent paper in which the authors tried to make science by nailing down a more precise definition of the term. In the Keys you mostly see Reddish Egrets in shallow saltwater ponds or out on the tidal flats.
