Cicero And The Catiline Conspiracy

I say that you came the night before I will say nothing obscurely into the Scythe-dealers' street, to the house of Marcus Lecca; that many of your accomplices in the same insanity and wickedness came here too. In the winter of 49 BCE, Caesar went to his winter quarters in an attempt to come to an agreement with Pompey. So he sent his men throughout the countryside, to Capua, to Ostia, to Cisalpine Gaul, and most importantly Etruria.

Against Catiline

The information, which many would at first question its authenticity, came from a woman named Fulvia, the mistress of the Quintus Curius, a friend of Catiline. The senate is aware of these things; the consul sees them; and yet this man lives. When the Senate was informed of the developments, they declared the two of them public enemies.

Cicero And The Catiline Conspiracy

You attempt nothing, you execute nothing, you devise nothing that can be kept hid from me at the proper time; and yet you do not cease to attempt and to contrive.

CICERO AND CATILINE

For we are in possession of a similar decree of the senate, but we keep it locked up in its parchment—buried, I may say, in the sheath; and according to this decree you ought, O Catiline, to be put to death this instant.

Chapter 5

. In addition to publishing original articles, the journal also features authoritative bibliographies of recent research on ancient authors and topics, regular surveys of textbooks and audio-visual materials, and extensive and timely reviews of scholarly books on the classics. And yet, why am I speaking? Envoys from the Allobroges, a tribe of Narbonese Gaul, had recently arrived in Italy to seek redress against Roman misrule and the depredations of the Italian financiers.
