In both contexts, the mountain location of New Jerusalem resonates with the pattern found in the Old Testament.

God's Holy Mountain

The myth states that Roman architect had wanted to carve Alexander the Great's figure onto the top of the mountain in tribute to him. After the in the seventh century, many Orthodox monks from the Egyptian desert tried to find another calm place; some of them came to the Athos peninsula. After the conquest of Constantinople in 1453, Byzantine political influence was effectively ended, but the prerogatives of the Greek Church remained and were amalgamated by the Sultans.
