Television and Democracy: A Philosophical Analysis

I also think we overestimate the power of television and the extent to which pundits' opinions hold sway in the minds of viewers, especially seasoned viewers. It was streamed on the Democratic website as well as several TV stations across Virginia.

We need public television to power our democracy

Democracy depends on reason and a well-informed citizenry; television on the sub-rational manipulation of wants. I agree with Alterman about a lot of things, but I disagree with his conclusions about the show's debilitating role in political life.

Democracy Now: A Look At The Future Of Television

This makes it more difficult for the winner in any given context to acquire the respect of the opposition that is often necessary for governing. Press coverage of the broadcasts was widely laudatory. Partnering with American Pathe newsreels, they would fly 1000 feet of film the length of a standard 16 mm film reel or about ten minutes worth of film to NYC, and each day broadcast filmed highlights instead—not ideal, but better than nothing.

The Effect Of 'In Your Face' Political Television On Democracy

As audience-response theorists know, reading against the grain or talking back to TV texts is a common practice. Three more debates are scheduled before the June primary.
