Bede Rundle, Mind in Action

Knowing this means we can always assume the point of Power and control over our lives that we have always had: the point of Power God is creating us to be. It is our minds that decide what part of God's good will becomes part of our lives.

After a lengthy obituary detailing her life and athletic accomplishments, the article in the London Daily Mail concluded that she was killed by thirty years of thought! It shows that we have an incredible ability to process ideas. We Can't Control Our Bodies Without Controlling Our Minds If we don't prepare our minds for action, we won't have the spiritual strength to control our bodies.

That the environment can be used in this fashion, as an externalized extension of memory, is not surprising.

Bede Rundle, Mind in Action

It is how we perceive, view, and think about events or comments that give rise to feelings. If events actually caused feelings then the same event would cause the same feeling in every person that experienced the event. If it were not, a thought of fear could not increase adrenalin and cholesterol, dilate your blood vessels, and create the many other physical changes in your body.

Mind in Action

If what happens in our lives is the result of anything other than our thinking, then it is not we who decide our fates. Such flexible information processing is an example of bricolage Lévi-Strauss, 1966. We must prepare our minds for action to live as obedient children of God.

Mind in the Making

Compelling reasons are given for demoting causation and for shifting the emphasis to the role played by behaviour in accounts of thought, belief, desire, intention, freedom, and other key concepts. Whether or not you are ultimately convinced by the arguments themselves, you will be impressed by the depth and clarity of the exposition.

Mind in Action offers an alternative approach.

5.13: Mind in Action

During the years he built the ark, preparing it according to God's commands, He was obeying God; and in the end he was rewarded.
