Happily for the state this has taken the most root in the communities that it saw as offering the most potential threat in terms of collective resistance to police control and work discipline: crime, gang warfare and penal response are a much more comfortable outcome for them, shite as it pans out for people on the ground.

King's College London

Extra impetus was added to the persecution of wanderers and force people back into what the ruling elites saw as their place, after the cataclysmic events of the Peasants Revolt in 1381.

Lambeth

Blades' grandson, Joshua Blackburn Jr, inherited the estate on his mother's death in 1860 and building in the area resumed to take advantage of the opening of Herne Hill Station in 1862.

Archbishop of Canterbury

Or, as in Brockwell Park, a stony slope by the Lido was prepared by a few dedicated volunteers and seeded for wild flowers and it flourished! The festival also features a range of talks, tours and tastings and you can sample some special foods at the onsite eateries. It was the priest-architect de Colechurch who was also responsible for building the new bridge of stone, apparently on the orders of King Henry II. He had been first drawn to this work in 1883, after listening to a sermon in St Mary's Church, Oxford, by , Vicar of Whitechapel.

King's College London

At some time in the 1380s, it is suggested Chaucer moved out to Kent where he is thought to have started work on The Canterbury Tales and where he also served as a local MP.

Magna Carta

Unveiled by Queen Elizabeth II in 2005, it commemorates the 4,000 police officers who have been killed in the course of their duty in the UK and was commissioned by the Police Memorial Trust.
