are erratic and far from consistently given. Movements of army and navy personnel featured widely in the 18th century, as did reports of loyal addresses at times of national or local difficulty or celebration. To open a result, click on the blue underlined heading.

British Army WW1 Medal Records 1914

Using The London Gazette to Research WW1 Soldiers The London Gazette is a newspaper of record which is particularly useful when researching officers and those granted honours or gallantry awards during the First World War. The London Gazette, together with the Edinburgh and Belfast Gazettes, is the official paper of the government in the United Kingdom. The Gazette was not a newspaper in the modern sense: it was sent by post to subscribers, not printed for sale to the general public.
