The state can contribute by planning broad strategies of development, providing essential infrastructure, and devising effective regulatory mechanisms to protect the interest of the industry, the consumer and environment. · Increased Vulnerability and Inequality: The economic crisis has resulted in job losses across the board and particularly affected workers in the informal and gig economy who have little or no access to safety nets, accelerating inequality and poverty. In the relief stage, the focus of health measures is to contain the spread of the virus and to preserve health services for non-COVID-related infections.

About ITC

Singh is former CEO of NEPSE and former Executive Director of SEZ. As Harry Truman famously said, the only thing that's new in the world is the history we haven't read. This needs an urgent redress, and the data that do exist need further disaggregation, particularly based on new political jurisdictions.
