According to Janse and Konijnendijk 2007 , urban society's manifold perceptions, preferences and demands for urban forest goods and services indicate the necessity for socially inclusive policy planning processes. It also includes a lifetime fitness course that encourages the lifelong health of graduates. The three quadrants identify Applied Science, Professional Consultancy, and Post-Normal Science.

Development communication

The first research question that was addressed in a number of American papers was How does interaction develop where there exists the possibility of affecting one another's interests? It is the application of the policy sciences to improve policy development, implementation and evaluation in the development communication context. Risk is a combination of two factors: 1 the probability that an adverse event will occur and 2 the consequences of the adverse event. Noticeably, everything that was mentioned in the explanation of the definition of development communication has something to do with goals, progress, theory, research, problem identification, and practices.
