Labor market segmentation by industry sectors and wage gaps between migrants and local urban residents in urban China

They are also capable of providing modern accounts of the interactions between long-term structural transformation and the distribution of welfare.

Skilled labour shortages and wage 'roll

First of all, there is a significant interaction effect between county GDP per capita and gender, and an additional 10,000 yuan increase in GDP per capita reduces the gender gap for income by 2%.

Regional segregation or industrial monopoly? Dual labor market segmentation and income inequality in China

This is clearly reflected in the increasing disparities between different trade types, with the processing trade becoming faster than the conventional trade in China. Nonetheless, our results differ substantially from those of Wang and Wang , whose estimates based on a decomposition of the Theil index suggest that the impact of regional variation on income inequality is much more important than that of industry variation.

Segmentation or competition in China's urban labour market?
