The Writings of Leslie Lamport

The real challenge for building a good classifier is twofold: first, the classifier must be given the right descriptors for its objects and, secondly it must possess a good discriminant function. Concretely, this means that text classification must be linked to the dynamic process of text interpretation and hence must be appreciated according to this end. Nishio, editors, Proceedings of the 21st International Conference on Very Large Data Bases VLDB , pages 606-618, Zurich, Switzerland, September.
